ARAM KHACHATURIAN
(1903-1978, ARMENIAN)

Born in Tbilisi, Georgia. His earliest formal studies were at the Tbilisi Commercial College where he played in an amateur wind band and started composing piano pieces. After moving to Moscow, he entered the Gnesin Institute to study the cello and then transferred to the composition department where his teachers were Reinhold Glière and Mikhail Gnesin. Afterwards, he continued his studies at the Moscow Conservatory where he took composition classes with Gnesin and Nikolai Miaskovsky, orchestration with Sergei Vasilenko and harmony with Georgi Konyus. He subsequently taught composition at the Moscow Conservatory. He achieved international fame with his colorful, folk-inspired ballets and orchestral music but he also produced a large number of choral, vocal, chamber and solo instrumental works.

NIKOLAI MIASKOVSKY (1881-1950)

Born in Novo-Georgiyevsk (now Modlin), Poland. He received his first piano lessons as a child at home and then followed his family's wishes and took military training for a number of years. However, at the same time he sang in the choir of the cadet corps, took lessons on the piano and the violin, and played in an amateur orchestra. His professional musical training began when, on the advice of Sergei Taneyev, he took lessons in harmony from Reinhold Glière and studied counterpoint, musical form and orchestration under Ivan Krizhanovsky. Subsequently, he enrolled at the St. Petersburg Conservatory, where he studied composition with Anatol Lyadov, orchestration with Nikolai Rimsky-Korsakov and form with Jazeps Vitolis. He worked as a music critic and was appointed professor of composition at the Moscow Conservatory where he taught several generations of important composers. In addition to his monumental cycle of 27 Symphonies, he wrote other orchestral works as well as chamber, solo instrumental, choral and vocal music.
